

COOKIE POLICY

Definition and types of cookies

A “cookie” is a small text file created on a computer of the user at the time of accessing a specific site, with the purpose of storing and transporting information. Cookies are sent from a web server (the computer operating the visited website) to the user browser (Internet Explorer, Mozilla Firefox, Google Chrome et cetera) and saved on the user’s computer; they are then re-sent to the website at the point of subsequent visits.

For the purposes herein, they can be distinguished into (i) session or profiling cookies, according to their function and (ii) first-party and third-party cookies, according to the person who installs them.

Session cookies are used solely for the purposes of communications on an electronic network, or are strictly necessary for allowing the functionality requested which allows for normal browsing and use of the website. Prior consent of the interested person is not required for the installation and use of session cookies. Session cookies may be assimilated to analytical cookies, created and made available by third parties for statistical purposes, if appropriate tools are used to reduce the identification power of the analytical cookies used, for example by masking significant portions of the IP address, and the third party may not cross-reference the information collected already available.

Profiling cookies are used for sending advertising messages in line with the preferences expressed by the user when browsing the network. Prior consent of the interested person is required for the installation and use of profiling cookies. First-party cookies and third-party cookies can be distinguished according to who installs the cookies on the user’s terminal, and according to what is drawn by the operator of the site from the visiting user, or of a different site that installs the cookies by means of the first.
